The Role of Governance in Higher Education

Governance in higher education refers to the systems and structures that oversee the operation and direction of institutions. It typically includes the following components:

- Board of directors or trustees
- President and other senior administrators
- Faculty and staff governance committees
- Student government organizations

Governance ensures transparency, accountability, and shared decision-making.

The Intersection of Leadership and Governance

Effective academic leadership and governance are closely intertwined. Strong leadership provides direction and vision, while robust governance ensures accountability and stakeholder involvement. When these two aspects are aligned, institutions can achieve greater success in meeting their academic and operational goals.
