Sarah was adopted as a baby and has always wondered about her birth parents. When she was 18, she finally decided to search for them. She started by writing letters to adoption agencies, but she didn't have any luck. Then, she decided to try searching online. She found a website that had a list of adoptees who were searching for their birth parents. Sarah signed up for the website and waited to see if anyone would contact her.

A few weeks later, Sarah received a message from a woman named Mary. Mary said that she was Sarah's birth mother and that she had been looking for her for years. Sarah was overjoyed! She immediately arranged to meet Mary in Kansas.

When Sarah met Mary, she learned that she had been adopted by a wonderful family. Her adoptive parents had loved and cared for her like she was their own. Sarah was so grateful to them for giving her such a good life.

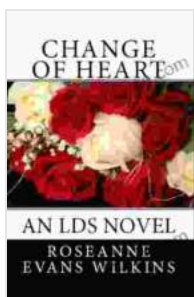

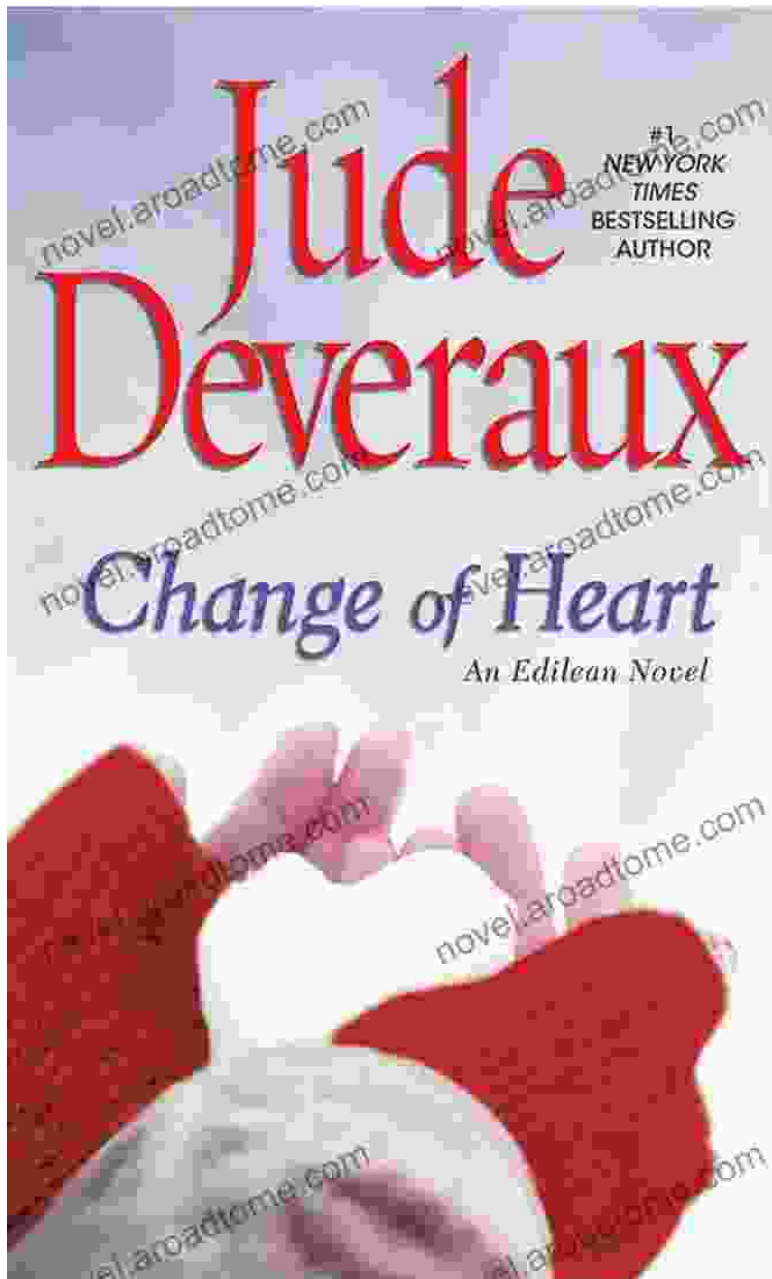

Sarah also learned that her birth father had died when she was a baby. She was sad that she never got to meet him, but she was glad to know that he had loved her.

Sarah's journey to find her birth parents was a difficult one, but it was also very rewarding. She learned about her family's history and the importance of forgiveness. She also found a new sense of belonging and purpose in her life.
