Rushdoony begins by arguing that the state is not a neutral institution. Rather, it is a moral entity that has the responsibility to enforce God's law. He bases this argument on the fact that God is the creator of all things, and that he has ordained the state as his agent to enforce his law.

Rushdoony then discusses the relationship between the church and the state. He argues that the church is not a political institution, but rather a spiritual one. However, he also believes that the church has a responsibility to speak out against the state when it violates God's law.

Finally, Rushdoony discusses the proper role of Christians in government. He argues that Christians should be involved in government in Free Download to promote God's law and to defend the rights of the innocent. However, he also warns against Christians becoming too involved in politics, as this can lead to them compromising their faith.
