The Quilt's Origins: A Personal Journey of Grief and Loss

The AIDS Memorial Quilt was born from the profound grief of Cleve Jones, a San Francisco-based activist who lost his friend to AIDS in 1985. Inspired by the traditional quilting bees that brought communities together in times of need, Jones proposed creating a quilt to commemorate those lost to the disease.

A Tapestry of Love and Remembrance

The Quilt quickly grew beyond Jones's initial vision, becoming a global symbol of remembrance and support. Individuals and communities from all walks of life came together to create quilt panels, each one a unique and deeply personal tribute to a loved one lost to AIDS.

Expanding the Quilt's Reach: From San Francisco to the World

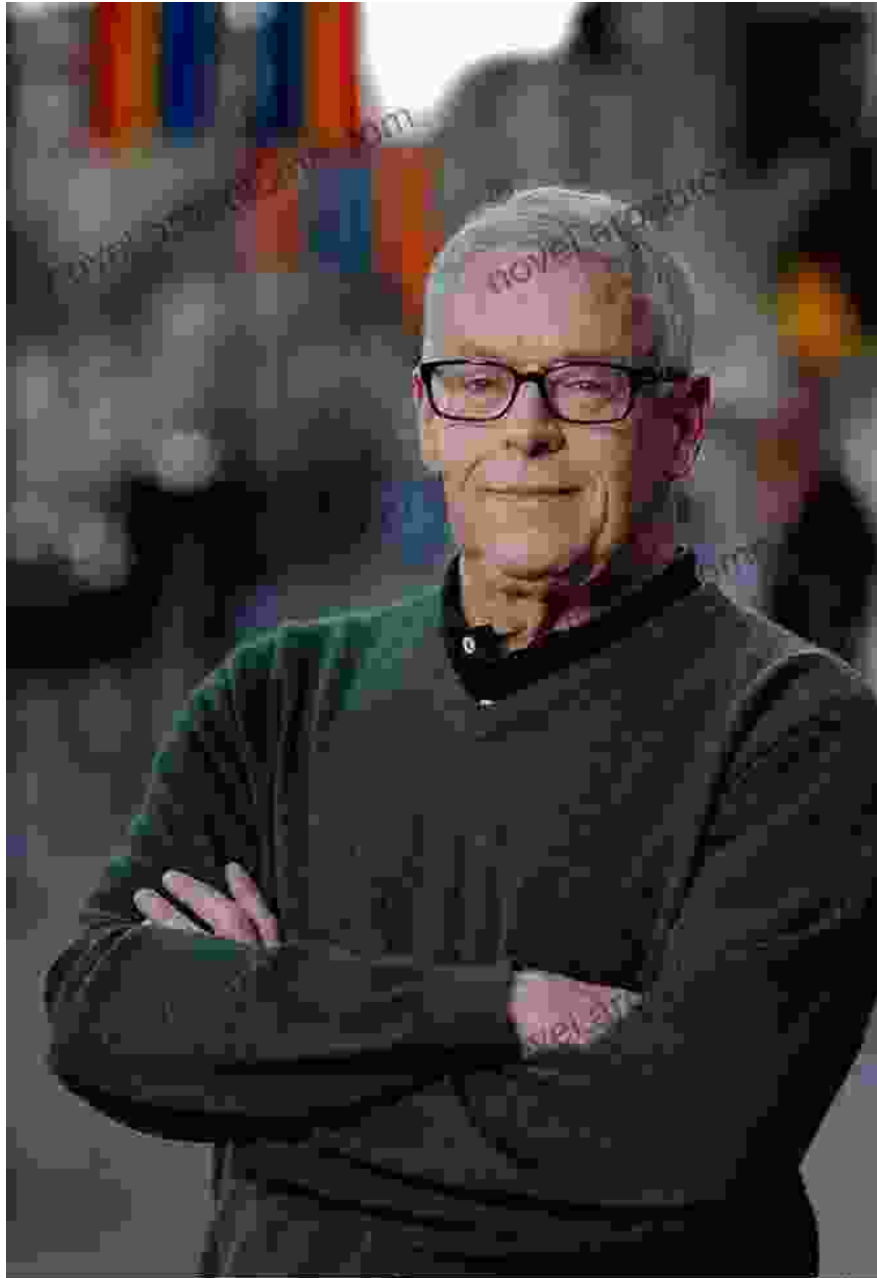

As the Quilt grew in size and significance, it began to travel nationally and internationally, serving as a catalyst for education, awareness, and compassion. It has been displayed in museums, galleries, and public spaces, reaching millions of people.
