Tennis elbow is a common condition that causes pain on the outside of the elbow. It is caused by overuse of the forearm muscles that extend the wrist. Tennis elbow is most common in people who play tennis, but it can also be caused by other activities that involve repetitive use of the forearm muscles, such as carpentry, painting, and typing.

The symptoms of tennis elbow include pain on the outside of the elbow, tenderness to the touch, and pain when extending the wrist. In severe cases, tennis elbow can make it difficult to perform everyday activities, such as lifting objects or opening jars.

Conventional treatment for tennis elbow includes rest, ice, and pain medication. However, these treatments only provide temporary relief from pain and do not address the underlying cause of the condition.

Homeopathy offers a natural and effective way to treat tennis elbow by stimulating the body's own healing response.
